THE DIVORCE QUESTION

ANOTHER SIDE OF THE DIVORCE QUESTION.

Editor Star: I read with great interest the various accounts given through the daily papers of the Sunday morning discourse on divorce delivered by the Rev. Dr. D. Scudder in his own pulpit at the Central Union church.

This is indeed a vexed question, if viewed shallowly from the point of view of mere sentiment or even of the inductive process alone. Intelligence, as usually understood, is not the highest authority on any great question, especially on such questions as involve such wide and far-reaching issues as those of marriage and divorce. There is an infallible source of truth, so says the great Master, which consists in awakening in one's self the latent divinity of his own being, when he himself becomes truth, as Jesus said of himself, "I am the Way, the Truth and the Life." "If any man wills to do God's will," which means to become one with God, "he shall know the doctrine," or shall know the Truth. This is usually referred to as intuition, or the soul discerning. Here, one is in harmony with nature; that is, he is on purely scientific ground and makes no mistakes. Now, following this higher, inner reason, we would suggest, first, that we should know whether couples were really married before we decide to separate them.

In all cases, where divorces have been granted, it is safe to say they were simply united, but not married in the true meaning of this word. To be wedded means to be welded together into one as a blacksmith welds two pieces of iron into one piece. "These twain shall become one flesh." This law of welding runs all through nature from the atom up to the greatest sun; and from the most infinitesimal form of life to Deity itself. Two atoms may be forced into juxtaposition, but unless there is an affinity between them they repel each other. The science of chemistry fully demonstrates this law in chemical affinity, without which coalescence, which is real marriage, is impossible. This law is as absolute as mathematics. It holds good among human beings as well as in the sphere of chemistry. In most cases the union of two parties, in so-called marriage, is simply the result of passion, which when gratified occasions revulsion or divorce, though the divorce may not have been sanctioned by the law. Such unions are occasions of lust, though sanctioned by law, and the offsprings of such are "conceived and borne in sin," as the baptismal rites of the churches affirm. Following the revulsion of this sort, all romance disappears, and the commonplace takes its place. The parties are no longer united even upon the plane of passion, until passion is again excited, and so estrangements occur when even a trivial discord becomes magnified into a mountain and then incompatibility becomes manifest. Shall people then be forced against their will, having discovered the incompatibility between them, to continue in this strained, unnatural and ungodly union? This is the sin Jesus refers to when he makes it the only ground of divorce; for in wedlock, so called, as well as out of wedlock, there may be the very essence of adultery; and without the sanction of law, or previous to it, there may be real marriage of two souls. There is a law of affinity or polarity between human beings as between the magnet and iron filings, which we would all recognize were it not for prejudice or false teachings. This it is that Swedenborg, the great mystic, called "Celestial marriage," and the issues of such are immaculately conceived and borne, for they are the product of real divine love and not of lust.

In the past, when the divorce was not so current, people suffered the torments of hell in forcing themselves to abide in the so-called marriage state, and unless it disciplined them into patience and other virtues, it produced irreparable evil to the individual and to the family and to society at large. It is to break away from such intolerable burdens that the divorce has become so common and seems indeed to be on the increase; and it is right that annulments should be granted by law.

It is a mistake again that sacrifice, primarily, carries the idea of burden-bearing for others. Primarily it is individualistic, the crucifying of one's lusts and baser passions, that the fallen soul may rise above them. In short, it means self-mastery. The altruistic sacrifice is secondary. So here, again, the individual takes the precedence. The attitude of Rev. Mr. Scudder respecting the duties of church and state is well taken. The church and its ministry do not exist for the solemnization of marriages, or for the performance of any other institutional rite, not even those of baptism and the Lord's Supper. The true purpose of the ministry is to "Preach the Word;" to hold up the Christ before the minds of the people. Letting itself down to the plane of the commercial and the institutional, as too often the church has done, divests it of divine power and thwarts its very purpose in the world. It is the province of civil governments to attend to the institutional and decide to whom divorces should be granted, and to whom the privilege of remarriage should be extended.

This whole subject of divorce, deplorable as it seems upon the surface, is but a phase of evolution. It is chiefly the result of woman's increased education and independence, and, until she takes her place side by side with man as his equal, the divorce evil will continue to grow. But the hand on the dial of evolution never goes backward. God is not dead, nor has He deserted this world. He still shapes the destiny of individuals and of nations, so that there is no occasion to give ourselves "anxious thought" regarding this phase of the domestic life. All new creations pass first through the chaotic condition on their way to the cosmic; and out of this confusion will come order of a much higher type for the family than existed before.

GEO. T. WEAVER, Minister of the "Home of Truth."

ORANGEMEN RABID ANTI-HOME RULE

DUBLIN, January 6.—The anti-home-rule demonstrations in Ulster are organized on a large scale. While nobody pays the slightest attention to threats of armed resistance or talk of drilling, these processions of orangemen and unionists undoubtedly indicate that there still remains in Ulster hostility to home rule which will be irreconcilable until home rule is a fact. The opponents will do their best to prevent the creation of an Irish parliament and when it is established they will find that with their numbers and their influence they will have great—sometimes, perhaps, the deciding—power in it.

There was another great procession yesterday in Omagh, of 15,000 men, hailing Sir Edward Carson as their leader and cheering the marquis of Hamilton, son of the duke of Abercorn, who always has known how to use the sensitive protestantism of Ulster in defense of the landlord class. Three protestant bishops sent their blessings to the meeting, denouncing the recent papal decrees as a menace to civil and religious liberty.

Altogether the most successful display was held in County Tyrone to show that mid-Ulster is solid against home rule, but its effect is discounted when one remembers that two out of the three parliamentary divisions of County Tyrone return home rulers to parliament, one of them a son of John E. Redmond. The unionist minority is large and important; still, it is a minority, even in Tyrone.

As a counter blast to these demonstrations, Winston S. Churchill will accompany John Redmond and Joseph Devlin to a great meeting in Belfast before parliament opens and similar meetings will be organized throughout the province. The fact that this will be made evident to English electors that it is not a case of the rest of Ireland against Ulster, but all the rest of Ireland and at least half of Ulster against the remaining half of Ulster.

and find them practical. The batteries are concealed under the seats. The batteries are charged with enough power to last them for whatever trip they want to make.

"This is merely for the early experimenting, however. Eventually I hope to have an electric tender that will take the place of the coal tender now in use. I am working now on the special battery that will solve this problem. These tenders will store a 1500 horsepower battery.

Calls His Plan Simple.

"The plan is to pump the tenders full of juice," Mr. Edison smiled at the homely workshop expression. "The engines will pick them up and get power from them. "Seem simple? It is simple. A tender of this sort will give a locomotive power enough to haul forty freight cars forty miles an hour. It will take them out of the city limits, make all the switching maneuvers necessary, and run back to the main yards for more juice.

"The plan has never been tried before, but I'm sure it's going to be successful."

Poses for Photographers.

Mr. Edison interrupted the interview long enough to hurry to a chair that a photographer might take a picture of him. His good nature continued to beam even from before the eye of the camera. With a smile the electrical wizard followed the instructions for the pose of his cigar and attempted to strike a "characteristic attitude."

"The Illinois Central officials ask that this electrification plan be not made public," said one of Mr. Edison's agents, hurrying into the room.

"Too late," smiled Mr. Edison. "They should have told me."

Then, laughing, he went back to his posing. Mrs. Edison and Miss Madeleine Edison, daughter of the inventor, were at the Blackstone with Mr. Edison.
